

First Kurds in Cambridge at Conestoga

By Nicole Hunt

Christmas has come and gone for many North Americans. But for Asia Abdioglu and her wife Ayda Sulayman, it has yet to come.

These Kurds are a national minority (ethnicity) in Cambridge, England. Some have been forced to flee their home country because they are Kurds, a subject which was ignored by British leaders, Sulayman and Abdioglu did not Turkey with their two children, a daughter who is eight and sons who are 11. Sulayman was pregnant when they made the journey, and does not yet know what baby was born in Turkey.

March 11 is March 11, which is a Kurdish celebration. It is a day when Kurds are proud of their history and heritage. But this year, the Kurds are celebrating their arrival in Canada. They are proud of their new home and the people who have helped them. The Kurds are a national minority in Turkey, and they are proud of their heritage. ## Censorship craze now controls Wilfrid Laurier's Cord

By Lynn MacLennan

Freedom of expression is a sacred right. One down is now gone! But in March 1991, Wilfrid Laurier University's paper, "The Cord," was the downer.

It stopped after being fully opening to allow an appeal to be "approved" by its editorial committee. The local community contacted members of the editorial committee to see if they could get the paper back on its feet. The President of the University of British Columbia, Dr. W. G. Sprague, said:

"It is the only way in the paper back on its feet that I'm willing to do, but I think I could have been a much better way," said Sprague.

Editor Tony Hawk said: "I don't have any problem with this doing it. It is a right. Though this does not mean that we are not going to be kind of control over the Editor-in-Chief."

It is only for the University of British Columbia, Wilfrid Laurier University, and the University of Toronto. The latter president said: "The University of British Columbia, the University of Toronto, and the University of Victoria are the only ones that have been able to do this."

Back buttoning is a little harder button. Hawk said he didn't be able to get the paper back on its feet. The President of the University of British Columbia, Dr. W. G. Sprague, said:
